This Day in Yale History, 2014

August 29, 2014 / Nave renovations unveiled

On this day in 2014, the News reported on the Sterling Memorial Library's central nave, which reopened on Monday, following a 15 month renovation project funded by a $20 million donation. Students returned to campus that week to encounter the renovated spaces, which included repaired stained glass windows, cleaned surfaces and newly installed lighting as well as environmental controls. The restoration came 84 years after the library first opened.
