Refrain from Abhorring

Sometimes we agonize over something in particular, an incident, or another person, which can lead to frustration and anxiety in the long run. Forgiving a person or apologizing for something can lead to restitution as well as temperance and solidification.

In other words, we should refrain from hatred, holding a grudge or being revengeful. A person that forgives will have their trespasses forgiven as well. This allows both parties to be winners. Having a forgiving attitude will allow you to rectify your problems, any challenges in the future, and for you to reach your full potential without being arrogant or audacious.

Remember, try being the person you would like to be around. You will make many friends as well as setting the right example.
