PHOTOS

Programs Council hosts PB&J Thursday

Lily Rand
Photo Editor

On Thursday, Oct. 1, the Programs Council welcomed students to its weekly PB&J Thursday in Engleman hallway outside Room B121. From 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., students stopped by for free peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, snacks and drinks between classes. The event offered a convenient way for students at the university to grab a quick lunch, take a break from their schedules and spend time with friends. PB&J Thursday is one of several recurring Programs Council initiatives aimed at enhancing campus life and providing accessible opportunities for student engagement. By combining free food with a relaxed atmosphere, the program encouraged students to connect with one another while enjoying a brief pause to their week.

Photos: Mateusz Gazdzicki

PB&J sandwiches, chips, drinks and other snacks on the table for students.

Finance major Dino Turk, a junior, grabbing chips off the table with other snacks.

Students in line going down the table grabbing what they want.

Programs Council members restocking the table and engaging with students.

Programs Council members including sport management major Chance Lewis, a sophomore and nursing major Medjina Joseph, a senior, standing for a photo at their event.

Fair showcases majors and minors to students

Students interacting with faculty to learn more about majors and minors.

Music professor Heather Wagner and music chairperson Joshua Groffman at the Department of Music table.

Lily Rand
Photo Editor

On Sept. 28, the university hosted its annual Major and Minor Fair in the Adanti Student Center Ballroom, giving students an opportunity to explore academic programs and connect with faculty and advisers from across campus. The event brought together representatives from a wide range of majors and minors, allowing students to learn more about degree requirements, career opportunities and areas of study that matched their interests. Faculty members and advisers answered questions and provided guidance to students considering a change in major, adding a minor or exploring new academic paths. The fair served as the kickoff to the university's Week of Major and Career Exploration, which continued through Friday, Oct. 2 with departmental events, open office hours and additional opportunities for students to engage with faculty and staff while learning more about academic programs available across campus.

Photos: William Gagné
For more look at page 2

Faculty of the World Languages & Literatures-World Languages Lab explaining their programs to a student.

Coordinator of academic advising for major and exploration Morgan Cottrell and coordinator of first year advising Benjamin McNamee at Academic Advising table.

Different tables at the fair for students to learn information about.