PHOTOS

Students build terrariums for Earth Day

Lily Rand
Photo Editor

On April 22, the university hosted its Earth Day Terrarium Takeover in the Adanti Student Center in Room 217, where students spent the afternoon creating miniature plant ecosystems. The event ran from 2–4 p.m. and invited participants to build their own terrariums using soil, stones and a selection of small plants provided by the Programs Council. Staff members guided students through each step and shared information about the plants and how to care for them after the event. Tables were stocked with materials and decorations, allowing attendees to personalize their terrariums before taking them home. The program drew steady participation as students stopped in between classes to assemble a low maintenance addition for their living spaces. Free materials were available while supplies lasted, adding to the relaxed, hands-on atmosphere of the Earth Day celebration.

Photos: William Gagné

Different supplies including a plant, soil, a jar and more to decorate their terrarium.

Students putting their terrariums together.

Programs Council giving supplies to students.

An array of materials students could use laid out on a table.

Sociology major Jonathan De Los Santos, applied mathematics major Lena Nguyen, sociology major Susan Garlington and computer science major Crossby Dessalines, seniors, holding up their terrariums.

Cash Cobain takes the stage at spring concert

Students holding up their phones, shining their flashlights during the concert.

Nursing majors Georgia Gehrkens and Alana Garcia, sophomores, standing with their guest, Gabby Bekker.

Lily Rand
Photo Editor

On Saturday, April 25, the university hosted its spring concert, featuring Cash Cobain. He brought a crowd of students to their feet inside the Lyman Center after the show was moved indoors because of cold, rainy weather. Doors opened at 5 p.m., and students filled the venue early to secure a spot before Cash Cobain hit the stage at 6 p.m., delivering a high-energy set that kept the audience engaged from the first beat. Tickets remained available until 3 p.m. that afternoon, with each student able to purchase one student ticket and one guest ticket using their unique access code. The concert was a closed event for university students and registered guests only, and all attendees were required to show valid ID upon entry. Security checked all ticket holders inside, and no bags or re-entry were permitted.

Photos: Wade Barillaro

For more look at page 1

Cash Cobain standing at the end of the stage surrounded by students.

Students standing on stage behind Cash Cobain, dancing and singing.

The DJ table being set up on stage by Cash Cobain's staff, the university students and faculty.

Students holding their phones up to record Cash Cobain's performance.

A wide view of the stage and performers.

Cash Cobain rapping into the mic.