Behind the Headline

By Alex Hungs

On Saturday afternoon, after a late brunch with friends, I got a message about a protest in Fair Haven that was happening in an hour. I immediately jumped on the story. As a Minnesotan, I've witnessed firsthand the experiences of immigrants. The protest posed an opportunity to engage in New Haven with a topic that means a lot to me.

Bracing against the gusty winds and sporting my winter jacket for the first time this season, I sped over to Fair Haven on a city e-bike. Before I had turned the final corner, I heard a crowd chanting. After parking my bike, I spoke to protesters sporting "ICE out of CT" t-shirts and holding signs in support of the local immigrant worker community. One protester even wore an inflatable rat costume. As I conducted interviews and learned how personal this protest was for community members, I felt inspired. Maybe what really united New Haven was overcoming the chilly weather together.

November 17, 1993 / Quick Cash, Little Discomfort Lure Students To Model Nude

By Brooke Harlow

Nude modeling for art classes becomes a popular money-making scheme for Yale students. The art department contains the names of over 300 nude models, most of whom are Yalies. At $10 per hour, one experienced model has already made $500 this semester.

CORRECTION:

An earlier version of an article by Karissa Cheng and Premrudee Mepremwattana, "At Veterans Day ceremony, top administrators honor alumni who served," mischaracterized a statement by Keith Buckholz '27. Buckholz spoke about his mission at Yale in his speech at the ceremony, not in an interview with the News.

A headline of an article by Lena Katir, "'Come from Away' to play through Sunday," misstated the closing night of the Yale Dramatic Association's fall mainstage show. It closed on Saturday, not Sunday.
