MEME OF THE DAY

"Trick-or-Treat at the U" returns today

The UConn Student Union hosts their annual "Trick or Treat at the U" event from noon to 3 p.m. today. Union-residing organizations and cultural centers will be handing out candy or other goodies.

The University of Connecticut Student Union is hosting its annual "Trick-or-Treat at the U" event from noon to 3 p.m. today.

All Union-residing organizations and cultural centers like WHUS, the Women's Center and HuskyTHON will be handing out candy or other goodies. The candy options include M&Ms, Skittles and Almond Joys, among others.

Jeff Alton, an associate director for the Asian American Cultural Center (AsACC), said the event reminds him of Halloween memories.

"There's a very nostalgic feeling I get when I pass out candy of how much fun it was for me to trick-or-treat when I was young," he said. "All in all, it's a fun event."

Besides trick-or-treating, the event is a way to highlight the Union and what it provides for students, Student Union Event Planning Coordinator Jennifer Hedges said. Most students go to the Union for food or drinks without knowing there are other amenities. The trick-or-treat event brings the UConn community together to notice all the programs, cultural centers and resources that make up the Union, Hedges said.

"Students haven't really seen or experienced what else can be offered for them throughout the building," Hedges said. "This event kind of gives them an opportunity to explore in a fun way."

Ian Shick, the assistant director for the Rainbow Center, said the event's foot traffic is why the center is involved.

"One reason we participate is the increase in traffic of people who may not have ever been to our space," they said.

The Union spaces will mostly be covered in Halloween items, with some exceptions. This could include jack-o'-lanterns, spiderwebs and other scary decorations. Some organizations even go the extra mile and have a complete theme for their space.

Alton said that AsACC will be in the Halloween spirit with its decorations.

"We usually put up some pumpkins around the front desk and maybe some spooky items," he said.

Students are encouraged to wear a costume, but it's not required. In past years, costumes have ranged from bananas, wizards and even Bob Ross.

Hedges said she admires people who create DIY budget costumes.

"I know college students' funds are short a lot of time," she said. "So, seeing what they can create out of their own closet has always really been impressive to me."

Students who wish to participate will need to swipe their student ID card in the Union's north lobby. From there, students will be handed a bag to collect their candy in.

WHUS' annual Mischief After Dark concert is being held tomorrow at the Student Union Ballroom, with the concert starting at 5 p.m.

The event has free admission as long as students bring their student ID with them.

"The show will feature live bands, Ovlov, based out of Newtown CT, and Whisper Doll, based out of Brooklyn, NY," according to a press release from WHUS.

Doors will open at 4:30 p.m. with Whisper Doll starting off the concert, according to the press release. Ovlov will play at 6:30 p.m.

Marli Miller, the promotions director at WHUS and a seventh-semester English and communications major, said there will be merch available at the concert.

"At this event, we'll be giving out posters and just more information on how to get involved at WHUS and some [WHUS] merch," she said.

According to Miller, there will also be a costume contest at the event.

"It's just a good way to hang out with people on campus, hang out with your friends," she said.

Ovlov is a popular band locally, she said.

"I think that a lot of people on campus would know and enjoy these bands, so I'm hoping we get a pretty decent crowd," Miller said.

According to Miller, WHUS has been working on the event since the summer and is very excited.
