Turning Point in a Legacy

By Elijah Hernandez &
Nicolina Coronis
Staff

Charlie Kirk and Turning Point USA have become more than just an outlet for conservatives on college campuses nationwide; they have become a spearhead for uncomfortable conversations to be had on an even larger scale.

With the death of Charlie Kirk on Sept. 10, 2025, the future of Turning Point has been left in the hands of members and a widow alike. The question of what his legacy will look like in history is heavily reliant on how the future unfolds.

Popular for hosting “prove me wrong” type events on campuses, these intense conversations are believed to have played a role in Kirk’s death. Jake Warner, a junior and member of Central Connecticut State University’s chapter of Turning Point, said there are two paths that the U.S. can go down that reflects the effects of Kirk’s death.

“His death could lead the country in one of two ways,” he said. “It can either be a step in a direction where there’s more of a united peace, and as a collective being like this is not OK- or it’s going to go into a place where this is something that is normalized. This could set a precedent of assassinating your opponents if you don’t agree with them.”

Turning Point was founded in 2012 by Charlie Kirk as a nonprofit organization that aims to promote free speech, limited government and active civic participation among a younger demographic.

We Work. Who Profits?

By Nicolina Coronis
Staff Writer

Protests by food service workers at Central Connecticut State University have sparked campus-wide discussion about Sodexo. With common ground nowhere to be found, the renegotiation of their contract is at a standstill.

The contract governing wages, benefits, and workplace policies has expired since March, prompting an opportunity for conversation between Sodexo and the food service workers' union, Local 217. Seeking higher pay, workers have been marching across campus, chanting slogans and wearing shirts reading, One Job Should Be Enough.

Kadeene Smith, a Starbucks barista on campus, said it is difficult to support her family with the current wages.

"We're out here saying that one job should be enough. I'm a single mother and I work full-time at Central, but with inflation, our wages aren't enough to cover daily expenses anymore," she said. "It's not about luxury or even living comfortably, I need a fair contract just so I can live and feed my kids. That's why I'm serious about winning this contract, because it's the contract we need."

The First Cook at Memorial Hall, Nick Doty, is one of many food service workers on campus who have to go to extra lengths to meet basic needs.

"I typically work 60 hours a week and I drive for Uber on the weekends," Doty said. "I want to be able to give my children a good life and be a good father to them. But at this rate, I have to choose between working enough hours to pay my bills and spending time with my family. No one should have to make this heartbreaking choice. I need a raise because I don't want to miss out on my kids' childhoods."

Following the protests, President Zulma Toro provided a statement regarding the anticipation of the negotiation.

"The university respects the rights of workers and unions to demonstrate peacefully and encourages a civil and safe environment. Central remains committed to supporting students' dining needs through this process," she said. "We expect the Hospitality union and Sodexo, a private vendor, to come to a mutual agreement as soon as possible."

In the exchange, Toro noted that Central has no say in the negotiation process.

The workers are looking to ensure that their voices and concerns are heard while continuing to fulfill their shifts, but they are running out of options.

"I want to just come to work, serve food to the students, and clock out. I don't want to strike, but rent has gotten too expensive, as have grocery costs and other household needs, and our wages have not gone up nearly fast enough," Smith said.

It's not just Central's food service workers that don't have a contract at the moment, the same is true for Southern Connecticut State University and Western Connecticut State University, all of which are a part of Local 217.

With a strike vote at CCSU happening on Sept. 29, hopes are high that a resolution will come out of this lengthy process.

Legacy

Students can request a Turning Point USA chapter on their campus to promote conservative thinking in an intriguing and relevant way that resonates with students. Also included is a student incentive program that grants rewards to students who practice debates on their campus.

His legacy has been built into Turning Point with these initiatives creating a proportional relationship between participation and following a more conservative school of thought.

After the news of Kirk's death, some, like freshman Maja Serwniski, were introduced to something they want to become a part of.

"I've known about Charlie Kirk, but it wasn't until his assassination that I found out about Turning Point," Serwniski said. "I've been conservative my whole life without knowing, and I was interested in this chapter because I'm not afraid to speak my mind. I think a lot of young voices woke up because we need to start doing something about it."

CCSU has a Turning Point Chapter, and its president senior Ian Howe says some of the best parts about being part of the organization is the ability to have an open dialogue.

"The First Amendment is the first for a reason, because it's the most important right we have," Howe said. "We've seen what a lack of free speech can do; you don't have much of a civilization without it. Without it democracy cannot exist."

Concerning the open dialogue, freshman Elora Cordero said more conversations need to be had, so understanding can be reached.

"Bringing more awareness to different topics and being able to discuss those topics in a respectful manner rather than an argument that gets nowhere, I feel like those conversations help get rid of the negative connotations surrounding Turning Point," she said. "Not to just change people's minds, but to also bring attention to, this is my viewpoint, maybe you can see where I'm coming from, and I'll be open minded to yours."

But even those without ties to Kirk's organization felt the situation was extreme. Senior at Central Connecticut State University, Gabriella Sciarretto, was shocked by the news of Kirk's death.

"I was [taken aback] because of how influential, good or bad, he was," she said. "He did not deserve to die."

Sciarretto reflected on Kirk's role in public life, recalling watching Kirk's videos online where they would often address controversial issues.

"It was very interesting to always see how he would interact with people...he was so very open-minded about all of it, about listening," she said. "He had been one of the leading figures in the 21st century."

Kirk's videos gained widespread popularity among college students nationwide. His message left a strong impact, encouraging discussions that challenged social norms.

"Having seen him speak, it's weird hearing he died," Howe said. "It's not grieving but still mourning relatively the same as if he were a loved one. It's a tragedy."

The Highs and Lows of Occupancy in Residence Halls

By Kristian Ngjela
Contributor

Residence halls in Central Connecticut State University have reached capacity, prompting the reopening of Clarence Carroll Hall.

The class of 2029 is the largest freshman class in recent history and is contributing a substantial amount to the 2,558 students that live in residence halls.

Marvin G. Wilson, the Director of Residence Life, said that the reopening of Carroll Hall is part of a strategy for the student demand of on-campus housing.

"Given the overwhelming demand, all three floors of Carroll Hall were fully opened for Fall 2025," he said. "Providing a vibrant and modern residential experience for more students."

Carroll Hall was open during the Fall 2024 semester with only the third floor being open, which allowed Wilson and others the time to discuss housing needs.

Carroll Hall was closed during the Spring 2024 semester, but Facilities and Management used that semester to work on reopening it.

"With the reopening of Carroll Hall and higher overall occupancy, staffing levels have been adjusted to provide consistent custodial coverage and maintenance support," he said.

"Our custodial staff are deeply valued members of our community, and their presence not only keeps our halls clean and safe but also contributes to the welcoming atmosphere students experience every day."

Wilson explained that the Office of Residence Life reintroduced the Senior Resident Assistant position and expanded Living Learning Communities to help create more connections between Resident Assistants and residents.

Wilson said that the higher occupancy will help build stronger communities between students.

"Research consistently shows that students who live on campus are more likely to persist and graduate, and this is an exciting time for Central as we create pathways for stronger retention and student success," he said.

While it does help the high student demand to reopen Carroll, a student living in Carroll shares his experience.

Cordell Shepard, a sophomore living in Carroll Hall, said he applied for housing late and was placed in Carroll Hall. He previously lived in Mid Campus and Beecher, but because of a gap semester, he was waitlisted.

"I remember hearing that they had opened it up, it was really surprising, and I was like dang, that must have happened this past year," he said.

Shepard said he felt more connection among his peers at Beecher compared to Carroll Hall which seems to lack a community.

"I feel as though despite having a similar setup to Beecher where you do have areas to get together and kind of come together... it's more like mid-campus in which everyone feels very individualistic and very kept to themselves and I just don't feel like that community is there," he said.

Shepard thinks the school is being overzealous with the students.

"I think that increase

Carroll Hall

in numbers has affected us through space, both for dorms and commuters,” he theorized. “I think it’s affected our class lives, and our dining halls, and out of class lives because there’s not enough space for everyone.”

Shepard said he feels the infrastructure in Carroll feels off as he describes his room.

“In my room, there’s like two pipes covered by duct tape and stuff,” he said. “I’m like 6 ‘3 and have a very large wingspan and it’s hard for me to get into the showers since there’s like a lip in front of them and I’ve almost tripped a bunch of times because of it.”

While Carroll Hall is a standard residence hall, it also affected the single style dorms in F. Don James Hall. Single style dorms in James Hall have been transformed into doubles.

Junior Alexa Tamburrino lives in James Hall suite with five other people. Tamburrino said it took trial and error to find a suite for her and her roommate, but they eventually found a group that took them in.

Although she was able to find her roommates, she said that there is extreme difficulty getting around the dorm hall due to the rise in occupants.

and done, like if you try to take an elevator, there’s times you have to wait like 10 minutes to get an elevator,” she said. “Even the laundry room with all the washers and dryers being filled up all the time.”

Tamburrino was under the impression that Carroll Hall was only going to be open temporarily.

“I feel like that’s really odd, and I feel like it might be harder for people to get medical supplies if they need them just because there’s so many people here,” Tamburrino said. “I think they should build more dorm buildings that are bigger like James instead of focusing on dorm buildings like Beecher or Seth North that can’t fit as many people.”

Commuter Column

By Nicolina Coronis
Staff Writer

While many Central Connecticut State University students take a short walk to reach their classes, commuters have already navigated busy roads and early morning traffic to get there.

The college experience is often described as an exciting step toward independence. But what the college experience looks like for students that commute rather than live on campus requires a unique skill set of packing half your life into your car because you never know what you may need, spending plenty of time searching for the perfect parking spot, only to discover its faculty only, and figuring out how to fill those three-hour gaps between classes.

CCSU offers resources to make those gaps easier to handle. The Central Commuter Student Organization hosts events like barbecues and drive-in movies to help commuters connect with each other.

According to its Instagram page, “Commutecentral,” the organization is “made for commuters by commuters.” Commuters make up a strong part of Central Connecticut State University’s student body and often get creative to stay involved on campus.

Miguel Pagan, a student worker and member of the Commuter Student Organization said “half of our student population is commuting. The goal of the Commuter Assistants is to foster a strong sense of community and connection on campus.”

The organization was built to help commuters take advantage of college to the fullest. Pagan also comments that “One of our flagship events is our Commuter Breakfast. Every Wednesday, we cater breakfast items from one vendor a week, and we switch it up to always deliver something different for the students,” Pagan said. “We host this event every Wednesday from 9-11 a.m., and there is almost always a group of students waiting before the event even starts because they anticipate it every week.”

This has created a strong commuter presence and creates an opportunity for commuters to mingle as some residents may do in their dorm buildings. Commuters can be assumed to be isolated on campus. “We address the issue of isolation or disconnection by being representatives of what commuters can do on campus.” According to Pagan, he believes the CSO should represent commuters’ top priorities.

Some plan their entire schedules around public transit, making it especially important to find clubs or activities that make the trip worthwhile. Commuting has its challenges, but it also comes with perks: saving money on dorms and meal plans, staying flexible for extra work shifts or

Worth the Taste but Not the Wait

By Jameson Lynch & Maria Sevilla Sola
Staff

Some students have noticed the new restaurant on campus, Qdoba, which has taken the place of Tres Habaneros.

While it adjusts to the new flow of the record-high number of freshmen on campus, there is a mix of responses on whether it's worth the price and wait time. Most students compare it to its past counterpart, using it as a means of comparison.

family time, and enjoying the comfort of home.

For many, living at home offers a sense of safety and stability that can make college feel less overwhelming. There are also more opportunities to meet people than some might expect. With events happening nearly every week, commuters who show up and engage with campus activities can still enjoy a full college experience.

Senior Alexandra Ruel commutes 35 minutes to campus every day, but she wasn't always a commuter. She spent her first three years living on campus be-

Student Colby Commune said he has eaten at the Mexican-style restaurant a handful of times and has enjoyed the food but prefers Tres Habaneros.

"In terms of food, Qdoba is fantastic, but everything else, how much you get, the quality, like the actual, not presentation of the food, but like the wait times and all of that would go back to Tres Habanerfore deciding to move back home.

"Something just changed, and I wanted to live at home," she said. "I missed being with my family and pets."

She also works on campus, using breaks between classes for her job.

"Working here is fantastic, it's a super flexible schedule because they know we're students," she said.

She added that working on campus has been a great way to meet people and feel more involved on os," he said. "It just feels like a downgrade."

Commune said he was left disappointed by the food he received after ordering, saying that sometimes the option to eat off-campus is better. He said that Qdoba considers making changes to become a better and more desirable option for students eating on campus.

"Consider maybe adding a little bit extra pro-campus.

Commuting, she says, is about personal preference, and for her, "my quality of life has improved," especially since she now avoids middle-of-the-night fire alarms and the infamous XL twin bed. Students like Alexandra are experiencing the benefits that commuting can offer.

Commuting at Central can be the right pick for some students and still offers a fulfilling college experience, Ruel adds "It's nice to be at home."

tein when someone puts it in, instead of what could essentially be looked at as like a quarter size of beef put in like 50 cents worth," he said. "And bring down the prices of the protein because paying extra for something that should be on there to begin with is just a slap to the face."

Commune said the food was delicious but not worth the long wait. He said eating there is more beneficial for students like him who have multiple hours between classes and can wait as long as needed.

"More often than not, your wait is like 20, 25, 30 minutes for food," he said.

Another student, Aidan Kane, also critiques the restaurant, saying its prices are the main reason he has not been interested in eating there yet.

Kane commutes to campus and said his schedule this semester also makes it harder for him to bring his own lunch, leaving on-campus food as his only option.

"Honestly, it's more the price than anything, and then their choices," Kane said. "It's a couple of dollars more expensive, which I'm not willing to, I really don't want to pay for. So, I usually go for another alternative like The Grill or Sub Connect."

He says the prices of the restaurant make it harder for him to consider Qdoba, and he's more likely to travel off school grounds to get similar choices for lower costs.

While some students are critical, some cashiers in Devil's Den said the lines speak for themselves. They said the best time to go to the restaurant is after the noon-time lunch rush while students are more likely in class or at work to beat the line.

Some also said that the feedback has been split, with some students already becoming regulars and others said it's not worth another visit.

Those looking to try Qdoba, it's open from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. and on Fridays from 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Central Alumni Wins PGA Event

Kyle Gallo won a Professional Golfers' Association event at Wethersfield Country Club with a final score of 2-under par on Thursday, Sept. 18.

Gallo graduated from Central Connecticut State University in 1998 and served as the head coach of the CCSU golf team from 2015 to 2018.

He competed for Central's golf team in his freshman, sophomore, and senior years, earning First Team All-New England honors in all three seasons. As a head coach, he led the Blue Devils to a Northeast Conference title in 2018, and they were also named the New England Division I Team of the Year.

The tournament was for professional golfers in the Connecticut area. Of the 64 competitors, three were Central graduates. Kyle Hedstrom, a PGA professional at Indian Hill Country Club, and Steve Madison, a PGA professional at the Golf Club of Avon, were the other two alumni to compete.

54th place.

Gallo emphasized the influence CCSU had on his career in golf.

"Central is my home. That's where I grew up and went to school. My mom worked there, my brothers went there, so Central will always hold a place in my heart," he said. "I've also met tons of friends who are still involved in the golf industry at Central."

Gallo faced tough competition throughout the day, particularly from Christopher Tallman, a PGA professional at Great Horse, constantly overtaking one another for the lead. It came down to the 17th hole.

Both men were tied at 1-under par. Gallo teed off on 17 and Tallman on 16. Gallo made a birdie on hole 17, a 207-yard par 3, and par on 18, a 426-yard par 4.

Tallman was unable to close the gap, making par on all three holes, which sealed Gallo's victory.

With the win, Gallo took home the $1,400 prize.

The topic of discussion among participants at the tournament was the difficulty of pin placements on the day.

Gallo explained how he remained composed despite the difficulties the course posed.

"I didn't really think about the pins too much. They certainly were in some interesting spots, but I've played enough golf now to know my skills and limitations," he said. "I limited my mistakes and was able to play smart golf."

Central Competes Against Reigning NEC Champions, Ends in 1-1 Draw

The Central Connecticut State University women's soccer team tied 1-1 against Howard University on Sunday, Sept 21. The Bison are the defending Northeast Conference champions.

The Blue Devils struck early, with sophomore forward Kayla Ward scoring her first goal of the season just over 10 minutes into the match.

Howard responded in the second half, when forward Gabriella Garcia-Terrell scored to even up the game. Her shot just escaped CCSU junior goalkeeper Melina Ford.

Ford made a season-high eight saves, with seven of those saves being made in the second half. The Bison recorded 16 shots in the game.

CCSU head coach Mick D'Arcy said he expected Ford to bounce back.

"I would expect her to make all of those saves that she made," he said. "Mentally, she's strong. She came back from the goal, and the goal certainly wasn't her fault."

D'Arcy believed that his team was prepared for the reigning champions.

"I think we were ready for them," he said. "Interestingly, they played a different shape in the first half than they usually do, and then they switched it to their usual one in the second half, but we were ready for either one of them."

He said that they missed many chances to get the win.

"We got the goal in the first half and had two more great opportunities to put them away," he said. "And I guess if you're playing the champion, you need to knock them out, and we didn't—we left them in the game."

He added that he's pleased with the fight his team has shown so far this season and remains optimistic.

"The glass is half full," D'Arcy said. "But now, you know, Chicago State—we got to go out there and replicate what we did today and put on another good performance and hope the chances fall for us."

On Sept. 18, the Blue Devils tied 3-3 with Wagner in their first conference match of the season. The two draws have earned CCSU two points in the NEC standings.

The Blue Devils picked up another point in the conference standings, and the tie against Wagner on Sept. 18 also gave them one point.

The Blue Devils are still searching for their first win of the season. They will host the University of New Haven on Sunday, Sept. 28, at CCSU Soccer Field.

CCSU Prepares to Take on Dartmouth in Homecoming Game

By Mekhai Ouellette
Contributor

The Central Connecticut State Blue Devils will host the Dartmouth Big Green at Arute Field on Saturday, Sept. 27, for its annual homecoming game. Kickoff is set for noon on NEC Front Row.

The Blue Devils enter the matchup with a 2-2 record, most recently falling to the Merrimack Warriors, 16-14, on Sept. 20. Warriors' kicker Carlton Thai made a kick from 19 yards out to seal the game, after costly penalties hurt the Blue Devils late.

Dartmouth comes in at 1-0 after a victory over the New Hampshire Wildcats. Running back

D.J. Crowther powered the offense, running for 143 yards and three touchdowns, while wide receiver Grayson O'Bara added six receptions for 106 yards.

Senior quarterback Brady Olson has been consistent through the last three games for CCSU, leading the team to a 2-1 record, throwing for 614 yards, four touchdowns and one interception. His lone interception was against Merrimack early in the second quarter, which set up the Warriors' game-winning field goal.

Running back Elijah Howard leads Central with 179 rushing yards, and wide receiver Dave Pardo leads with 171 receiving yards.

Junior quarterback Grayson Saunier was efficient in Dartmouth's opener, throwing for 244 yards with one interception while completing 73% of his passes. He also added 37 rushing yards and a touchdown. In last year's meeting with CCSU, he scored twice on the ground.

Last season, the Blue Devils defeated the Wagner Seahawks 24-14 in their homecoming game, led by Olson's 182 yards and two total touchdowns, while the defense racked up six sacks, including three by lineman Dan Toatley. The victory helped jump-start the Blue Devils' run to the FCS Playoffs.

The Blue Devils and Big Green have met three times, beginning in 2014. Dartmouth leads the all-time series 3-0, including last year's 20-16 win. CCSU looks to bounce back, while Dartmouth aims to stay unbeaten.

Central has tightened up on the defensive side of the ball since allowing 59 points to UConn in week one, allowing an average of nine points over the last three weeks. Meanwhile, Dartmouth allowed 20 points to New Hampshire but also had two takeaways and forced multiple turnovers on downs.

Time of possession may prove pivotal. The Blue Devils lost the time of possession battle 36:19 to 23:41 against Merrimack. Dartmouth controlled the clock in its win over.

Turnovers will also be key, as giveaways were costly for CCSU in its most recent outing.

In the second-to-last match before the start of Northeast Conference play, the Central Connecticut State men's soccer team lost 2-1 to the Binghamton Bearcats on Saturday, Sept. 20, at the CCSU Soccer Field.

Central head coach David Kelly believed that they should have won the game.

"Great effort," he said. "I thought we were the better team. We bested them in every single category except one. But we got to find a way to take the effort we're putting into games and get the result."

Junior forward Anthony Catanzaro scored the Blue Devils' lone goal in the 63rd minute, assisted by senior midfielder Alvaro Moros. The goal tied the game 1-1, but Binghamton responded less than 10 minutes later to tie the game.

Despite the loss, Central dominated in several statistical categories. The Blue Devils outshot the Bearcats 14 to nine, with six shots on target while Binghamton had only three on target. Central also had 10 corner kicks to the Bearcats' two. Binghamton had a slight advantage in total

Blue Devils Fall to Binghamton 2-1, Still Searching for First Win

Staff Writer

Photo credit Andrew Johnson; Junior Trevor Rau handles the ball in a 2-1 loss to Binghamton possession, 52% to the Blue Devils' 48%.

The game started with both sides trading possessions but neither able to gain an advantage over the other. That was until the 16th minute when a foul by the Blue Devils awarded the Bearcats with a free kick in a dangerous position. Binghamton defender Ryan Gillon scored the kick from 25 yards out, opening the game's scoring and giving the Bearcats a 1-0 advantage with 29 minutes left in the first half.

Going into the second half, the Blue Devils had a new game plan, controlling possession for as long as possible and playing it back to the keeper often. The new strategy paid off in the 63rd minute when a slip pass by Moros set Catanzaro up on the right wing to drive towards the Binghamton keeper and score, leveling the game at 1-1.

While Catanzaro's goal kept the Blue Devils in the game, it seemed to have the unintended consequence of allowing the team to take its foot off the gas. The Bearcats responded to the goal by dominating possession and denying Central the ball. Less than 10 minutes after Catanzaro scored, Binghamton bagged their second goal, making it 2-1 with 18 minutes left in the game.

The Blue Devils would do everything they could to equalize, but with limited time and an impenetrable Binghamton defense, they came up just short.

Although the Blue Devils created several goal-scoring opportunities, outshooting the Bearcats 14 to nine, they were unable to capitalize on those chances. Kelly said that it's only a matter of time.

"We have the players that can score," Kelly said. "We have the players that can finish. I think it's just a matter of time before we put everything right and the results go our way."

Kelly also pointed to Central's challenging non-conference schedule as valuable preparation for conference play.

"We play a very difficult schedule," he said. "We play four America East teams, we play a MAC team, we play a Big East team, we play an Atlantic 10 team — all in preparation for the conference. The margins are so close in these games that despite not getting the results that maybe we deserve, I think we're right on track for preparation for the conference. My boys are buzzing. Can't wait to get to conference [play]."

The Blue Devils find themselves on a three-game losing streak following their loss to UMass Lowell on Tuesday, Sept. 23, in their final non-conference match-up.

Central will now turn their focus to the Northeast Conference and will start fresh with a 0-0 conference record. Their first NEC test will be against Fairleigh Dickinson University on Sunday, Sept. 28, at CCSU's Soccer Field.
