Arts & Life

Quinnipiac and local community come together to celebrate Halloween at annual Boo Bash

VANESSA STABILE/CHRONICLE

Quinnipiac Athletics hosted its annual Boomer's Boo Bash Oct. 24.

RYLEY LEE/CHRONICLE

Boomer's Boo Bash offered goodies for kids at tables, including tattoos, stickers and candy.

RYLEY LEE/CHRONICLE

Graduate molecular and cell biology student Ella Carvell and junior English major Priscilla Baldwin hand out candy at the Ice Cats table.

RYLEY LEE/CHRONICLE

By KELSEY SWEET
Staff Writer

Quinnipiac University Athletics hosted its annual Halloween Boomer's Boo Bash Event Saturday, Oct. 24, bringing campus and the local community together for an early Halloween celebration with plenty of activities and seasonal festivities.

Athletics and student organizations hosted tables throughout the event, giving children the chance to participate in crafts and games while interacting with members of the Quinnipiac community.

Attendees could visit tables hosted by campus organizations including Student Government Association (SGA), QTHON and Quinnipiac University EMS(QUEMS) sharing information about what they do on campus.

Many also brought activities for children of all ages, including coloring pages, stress balls, felt crafts and so much more that community members could engage in.

Through these activities, Boo Bash brought together university students and local families for an afternoon of Halloween festivities.

VANESSA STABILE/CHRONICLE

One-year-old Albie Trump dressed up as a duck for Boomer's Boo Bash.

VANESSA STABILE/CHRONICLE

Senior applied business major and men's ice hockey forward Jack Stockfish juggles while at Boo Bash with Quinnipiac men's hockey.

VANESSA STABILE/CHRONICLE

2-year-old Liam Montano knocks over bowling pins with Quinnipiac baseball at Boomer's Boo Bash.