

Students connect at Involvement and Resource Fair

Lily Rand
Photo Editor

On Sept. 2, students gathered on the Academic Quad for the annual Involvement and Resource Fair hosted by the Office of Student Involvement. The event brought together student organizations, campus departments and university resources, giving students an opportunity to learn more about ways to get involved outside the classroom. Throughout the afternoon, students visited tables, spoke with organization representatives and explored opportunities related to leadership, service, academics and campus life. The fair also connected students with resources designed to support their success and help them become active members of the campus community. For many students, especially those new to the university, the event provided a chance to meet peers, discover organizations that match their interests and learn more about what the university has to offer. There was also free ice cream and snowcones provided by Seaside Creamery. Which is an alumni student owned business. This event not only provided students a chance to get involved but also a chance to connect with each other.

Photos: Lily Rand
For more on the story look at page 6

Management major Olivia Johnson, a senior, standing next to her Women in Leadership Academy club poster.

Organization leaders for the Innovation Hub standing at their table.

A student signing up for a club.

Psychology club and psi chi Honor Society table with information and free school supplies.

Accounting major Cyahna Mckenzie-Dunn, a senior, explaining her club.

Earth science club giving details about their club.

A student picking out stickers at an organizations table.

Seaside Creamery handing out free ice cream and snowcones.

Healthcare studies major Ariana Brown and biology major Amilia Cabezedo, freshmen, posing for a photo.

Students checking into the Involvement and Resource Fair.

Organizations introducing resources to students.

F.A.C.E Models giving a demonstration on walking the runway.

Students dancing in the Academic Quad to music.