This Day in Yale History, 2002

September 11, 2002 / A year after tragedy, Yale reflects on Sept. 11 attacks

By Rebecca Dana

Yale plans multiple memorial events commemorating the first anniversary of the September 11th terrorist attacks, including a campuswide moment of silence at 8:45 a.m., a memorial concert at the Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript Library at 5:15 p.m. and a candlelight ceremony at 9:00 p.m., led by University President Richard Levin.

Behind the Headline

By Elspeth Yeh

I was walking to a meeting on Whitney Avenue when I saw the banner advertising the new restaurant "Bibim." Immediately, my stomach was rumbling. I love bibimbap. So, I was thrilled when we decided to run an article on Bibim's grand opening. Cindy and I agreed on a time to dine at Bibim, and solicit sourcing for our article.

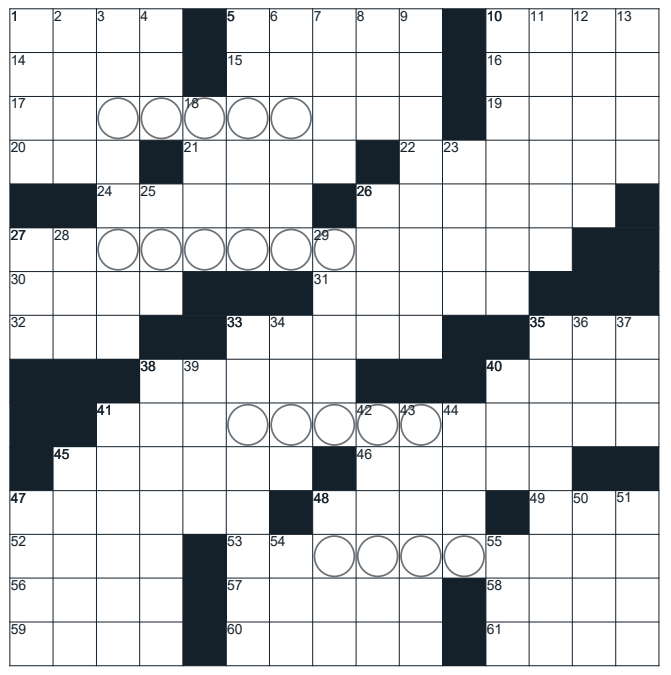

When I walked in, the atmosphere was quiet, yet festive. Streamers still draped across the room, and diners spoke softly to each other over Bibim bowls. Setting our stuff at a table, Cindy and I embarked on a turn about the room, starting conversations with the students eating at the restaurant and the employees behind the counter. To our delight, we spoke at length with one group of Bulldog Racers in the class of 2028! We quickly discovered we had mutuals. At last, we ceased interrupting their meals to begin our own.

In my dinner with Cindy, I discovered the true value of writing this article was not just sharing Bibim's story, but creating memories with my fellow reporter. Together we ate, laughed, and I cried over my Bibim bowl with extra spicy Buldak sauce. I hope our article inspires you to make a new friend over Bibim as well.
