BULLETIN

This Day in Yale History, 1957

September 18, 1957 / Yale Seeks Permanent Injunction Against Motel for Use of Its Name

By Alfred D. Youngwood

The University is currently filing a permanent injunction against Yale Motor Inn in Wallingford, Conn., charging the operators of the motel with using "the world-wide reputation and name of the University" for the motel's own gain.

Behind the Headline

By Aria Lynn-Skov

On Wednesday, I traveled to Washington, D.C. to see Yale President Maurie McInnis speak about a central focus of her presidency: declining public trust in higher education. McInnis spoke at the American Enterprise Institute in Dupont Circle to an audience of just over 60 people. I spoke to interns, academics, Yale alums and education lobbyists about their thoughts on McInnis' talk and what they do in D.C. It was a long day and a busy trip, but overall a fascinating look at McInnis' time off campus, which is often spent in the nation's capital.

Read "McInnis talks trust in D.C." on page 1.

ELIZABETH WATSON

