BULLETIN

ILLUSTRATION BY ANNA CHAMBERLIN

Behind the Headline

By Cyrus Turner

Nothing felt more classically New Haven than covering a pizza-themed Guinness World Record attempt for my debut Yale Daily News article. The event — which took place on the New Haven Green, less than a block away from my dorm — was already packed with people when I arrived around 5 p.m. I waited at the costume stand as those around me pulled their pizza-slice-attire over their heads, and I began to interview students, residents and visitors alike.

When asked about their favorite kind of pizza, my interviewees lit up with responses that ranged from pizza with peppers and onions to a sauce pie with grated cheese and garlic. Attendees of the event could purchase from a range of food trucks lining College Street. Given the forecast nor'easter, I was relieved the weather was nothing out of the ordinary for the start of fall. The light drizzle created an extraordinary rainbow to conclude the evening.

Read "New Haven attempts, fails to break food costume Guinness World Record" on page 6.

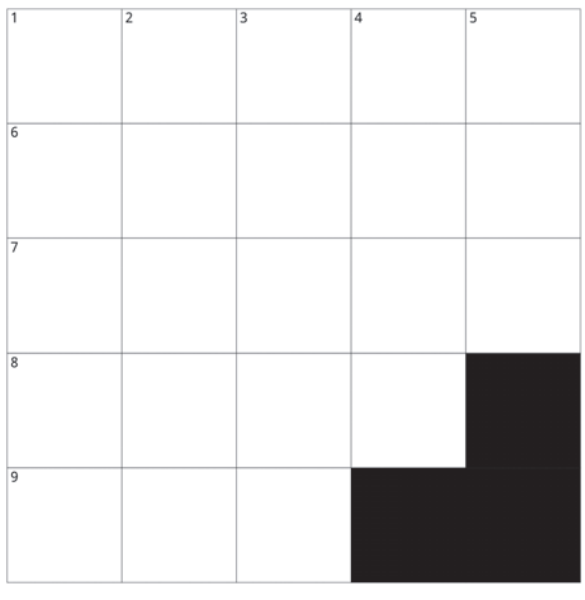

ILLUSTRATION BY ANNA CHAMBERLIN

Puzzle by Ariana Borut '27

ACROSS
1 Nor'easter, for example
6 Homes for honeybees
7 "To clarify ..."
8 Bookworm, stereotypically
9 Winter hrs. in New Haven

DOWN
1 Rain's counterpart
2 Multiplication word
3 Clear as day
4 Do some English homework
5 Yahoo! or AOL alternative

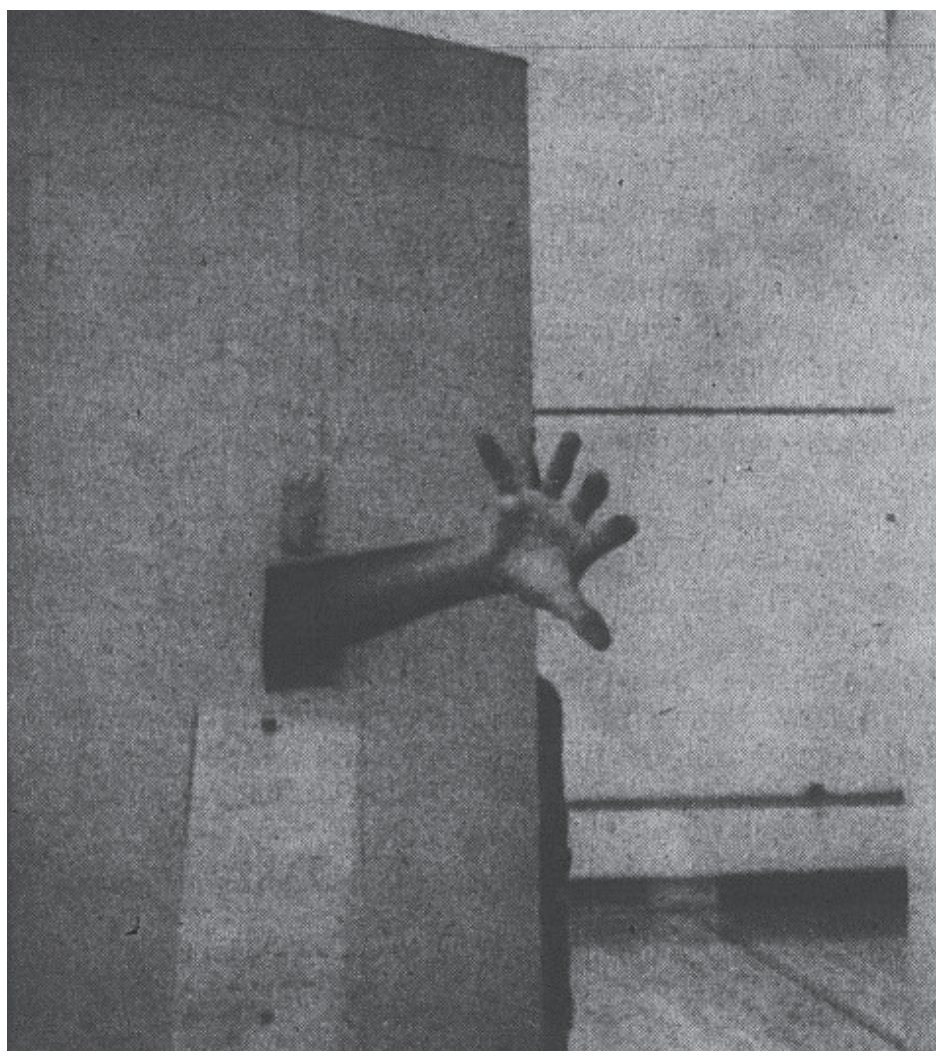

This Day in Yale History, 1981

September 29, 1981 / Squash courts trap players as doors refuse to budge

By Roy Herbst

The squash courts in Calhoun and Jonathan Edwards colleges are discovered to have doors that jam shut when closed, trapping players inside. Multiples students have spent more than two hours attempting in vain to escape, and in at least one case, two squash players remained stuck in the JE court from midnight to 3 a.m.

CORRECTION:
In last week's issue, the This Day In Yale History used an incorrect headline. The correct headline is "Dining hall employees protest excess workload."

ILLUSTRATION BY BEATRICE BARILLA

ILLUSTRATION BY CLARISSA TAN