Creating pathways for women leaders in tech business

Rhea See is the Co-founder & CEO of She Loves Tech, the world's largest tech startup competition and accelerator dedicated to women tech entrepreneurs. Under her leadership, She Loves Tech grew from a single-country initiative to a global platform spanning 80 countries, building a robust pipeline of 15,000 women-led tech startups across 110 nations. Her work has led to $600 million+ in funding raised post-competition. She extends her influence as an Investor, Venture Partner at Kaya Founders, Advisor to multiple venture funds, and member of the Walmart Innovation Council, where she focuses on gender-lens investing and bridging startup ecosystems across borders. With deep expertise in inclusive innovation and ecosystem building, she advises global leaders, aligning them with sustainability principles. Rhea is recognized internationally as a Yale World Fellow, Asia 21 Next Generation Fellow, World Economic Forum Global Shaper, and a member of UN Women's 30 for 2030 network, driving gender equality and digital inclusion across Asia-Pacific. She is also a United Nations EQUALS Partner, championing gender-equitable investment in tech globally. Her leadership has earned her numerous accolades, including being a two-time honoree on Tatler's Gen.T List, listed in Esquire's Trailblazers List, and inclusion among Singapore's 100 Women in Tech. Through her work, Rhea is leveraging the power of tech, capital, and diversity in shaping a future where everyone can thrive.
