

BULLETIN

This Day in Yale History, 1947

October 10, 1947 / Columbia’s Blimp Leaflets Unnoticed As Psychological Aerial Attack Fails

Columbia’s elaborately planned aerial attack to demoralize the student body of Yale before tomorrow’s game fizzled yesterday afternoon when a blimp passed virtually unnoticed over New Haven and unsuccessfully attempt to bombard the campus with 5,000 “Safe Conduct Passes” to Baker Field.

Only a handful of the orange, green, and pink papers reached a few bewildered Elis. The Lion bomber was more accurate in hitting his target at the bowl, however. Football practice was momentarily interrupted when members of the team stopped to read and tear up the notices in amused disgust.

Puzzle by Ariana Borut '27

ACROSS

1 Fan of Nicki Minaj

5 What a lightbulb signifies, in cartoons

6 Cove

7 Pre-weekend exclamation

8 Weeps loudly

DOWN

1 Retirement home game

2 Go off script

3 Snorkeling sites

4 Flutter, as eyelashes

6 Part of 7-Across

		1	2	3	4
		5
6
7
8

Behind the Headline

By Olivia Cyrus

Two weeks ago, while walking to a Spanish class, I passed Cross Campus. There, I saw a student manning a table and grilling what I thought to be an assortment of meats. Before his table was a white, hand-painted sign that said “Yale Sandwich Guy,” and I thought about how cool of a feature on student life it would be to write about him. The next day, however, when I walked the same route, I didn’t see him and was so disheartened that I never got his contact information. While visiting my friend in Pierson for dinner, I saw the same sign outside of an entryway and asked my friend if she knew him. She didn’t but instead gave me the contact for someone in his entryway. The guy in his entryway gave me contact information for Wyatt Lake ‘28, and we later connected and interviewed for the article.

During the interview, he told me that he’s a self-proclaimed “Grill Dad at Heart.”

Read “Student serves up bacon-egg-and-cheeses around campus” on PAGE 12.

Corrections

- A photo essay on Oct. 3 about the “Celestial Garden” exhibit misstated the name of the photographer who took the photos. His name is Braden Mathis, not Brayden Mathis.
- An article on Oct. 3 about administrators’ plans to respond to the endowment income tax hike misrepresented one of the measures Yale took to tighten its budget over the summer. The University decreased the pool of funds available for staff salary increases; it did not decrease the pool of staff eligible for salary increases.
- An article on Oct. 3 about the Yale New Haven Health system’s settlement with Prospect Medical Holdings incorrectly implied that Prospect Medical Holdings counter-sued Yale University. Prospect sued the Yale New Haven Health system, not the university, which is a different legal entity.

ACROSS

1 Throw a party

5 Keyboard key

7 Make amends

8 Place for a pin

9 L.A. clock setting

DOWN

1 Recover

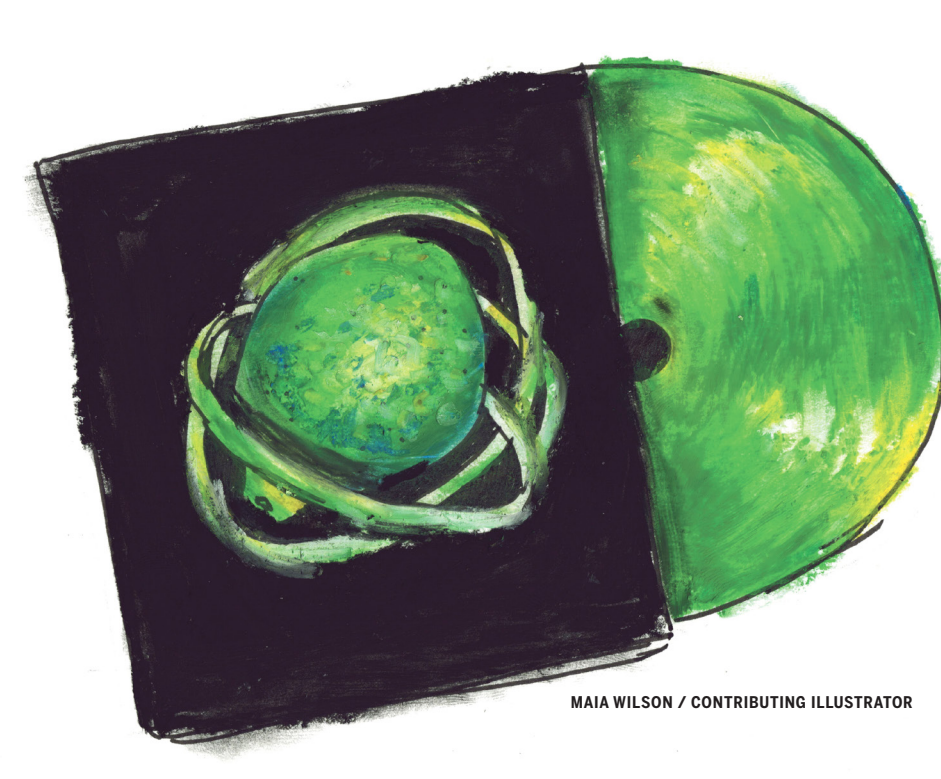

2 Like some beer at a bar

3 Points on a bus route

4 Core belief

6 Fam. member

1	2	3	4
5				6
7
8
	9

MAIA WILSON / CONTRIBUTING ILLUSTRATOR

ALEXANDER MEDEL / CONTRIBUTING PHOTOGRAPHER