

NOVEMBER 5

Later, University President Peter Salovey and Yale College Dean Holloway meet with about 50 students to discuss the experience of being in a minority group at Yale.

At the meeting, hosted by Salovey, Holloway and two other administrators, a member of the Black Student Alliance at Yale suggested possible steps the administration could take to address the discourse about campus racial climate. Salovey wrote in an email to the Yale College community a day later that the meeting left him “deeply troubled.”

Photo by Aydin Akyol, published in the News in 2015

NOVEMBER 9

More than 1,000 gather for a ‘March of Resilience’ across campus.

Hundreds of Yale affiliates participated in the solidarity march from the Afro-American Cultural Center to Cross Campus. The large gathering amid discussions about race on campus culminated in a lively gathering with speeches and musical performances by cultural groups.

During the march, students chanted, “We are unstoppable, another

Photo by Alex Zhang, published in the News in 2015

Photo by Deniz Saip, published in the news in 2015

NOVEMBER 11

Hundreds of undergraduate and graduate students attended a teach-in on race at Battell Chapel.

At the three-hour event, panels discussed supporting women of color at Yale, mental health in communities of color, addressing white and male privilege and the importance of taking ethnic studies classes.

Student attendees told the News they hoped the teach-in would show administrators that the student advocacy should be taken seriously.

Photo courtesy of Rise Nelson Burrow

NOVEMBER 12

Students march to Salovey’s house to deliver a new set of demands.

At close to midnight, roughly 200 students visited the president’s residence with updated calls for Salovey to develop the ethnic studies program, increase support for cultural centers, address mental health issues for minority students and remove the Christakis from their Silliman College roles.

Photo by Kaifeng Wu, published in the News in 2015

NOVEMBER 17

Salovey announces a series of policy changes geared toward diversity and inclusion

The actions publicized in a university-wide email sent on Nov. 17 included founding of a new academic center focused on race and ethnicity, more faculty positions and course offerings for scholarship on underrepresented communities and a five-year series of conferences on identity and inclusion. Salovey also announced Yale would dedicate $50 million to a faculty diversity initiative, double the cultural centers’ budgets and expand services for students – including more avenues for reporting discrimination.

Photo by Kaifeng Wu, previously unpublished in the News

DECEMBER 3, 2015

Erika Christakis leaves teaching role

FEBRUARY 11, 2017

Salovey announces that Calhoun College will be renamed for Grace Hopper GRD ‘34

Photo by Surbhi Bharadwaj, published in the News in 2017

