BULLETIN

This Day in Yale History, 1917

November 14, 1917 / Yale Committee Sets New Goal of $40,000 for YMCA War Fund

Yale University raised $29,137.99 in just two days during the YMCA War Work Fund campaign, surpassing its original $25,000 quota and setting a new goal of $40,000 to be reached by Saturday night. Yale now leads all other universities in contributions toward the $1,000,000 national target, with more than $500,000 already pledged across the county. The sophomore class raised the largest amount at $1,645.63, supported by major gifts such as a $10,000 faculty donation and numerous Liberty Loan bond pledges.

Undergraduate contributions averaged $20 per student, totaling over $8,200, while New Haven residents added $135,000 toward a separate local goal of $150,000, recently raised to $250,000. The campaign committee pledged to reach every Yale student before the drive's end and emphasized that each donation should represent a personal sacrifice, highlighting the university's leading role in the national wartime fundraising effort.

Behind the Headline

By Jaeha Jang, Olivia Woo and Nellie Kenney

Jaeha and Olivia were 25 minutes into a 11:35 a.m. intermediate microeconomics lecture in room 114 of Sheffield-Sterling-Strathcona Hall when we started hearing lively but unintelligible chants from outside. Curious about where the chants were coming from, we exited class and dove into the scene at the corner of Prospect and Grove. We found ourselves in the middle of a Local 34 protest. As we interviewed protesters, hearing passing cars and trucks honk for protesters and receiving business cards from media relations officers, we ran into our fellow reporter, Nellie. Meanwhile, the doors to SSS were subsequently "redlit," preventing us from returning to our lecture. We were thus outside to witness as the union members packed up their picket signs and headed back in unison to their places of work. Just as suddenly as the rally had begun, it ended — on schedule.

Read "Workers protest amid talks" on PAGE 1.

CELEBRATING 10 YEARS OF JUNZI KITCHEN

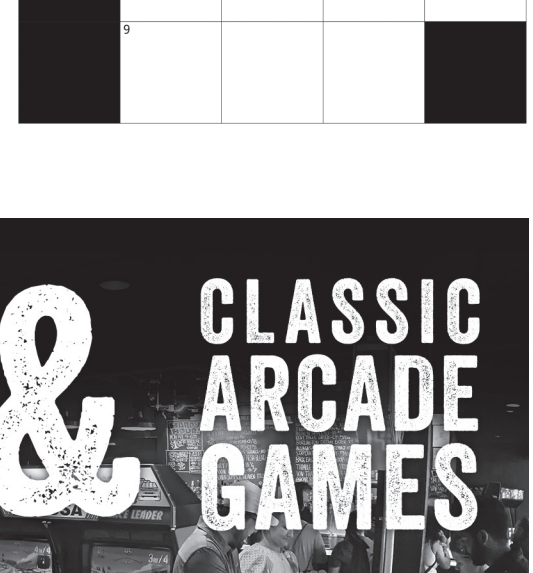

ILLUSTRATION BY SEBASTIAN WOODS

Puzzles

Puzzle by Ariana Borut '27

ACROSS
1 Starchy root vegetable in Latin American cuisine
5 State one's views
7 "So are we!"
8 Must-haves
9 High-performance cars

DOWN
1 Puerto Rican rapper ___ Miko
2 Unexpected win
3 Credits in a bibliography
4 Give ___ of approval
6 Skin care brand that shares a name with a Greek goddess

ACROSS
1 Sans-serif typeface
6 Lassi flavor
7 Rice dish cooked in broth
8 Vehicle at a weigh station
9 Parisian season

DOWN
1 Electric guitar equipment
2 Poker move
3 Shoreline nook
4 Athlete's best effort
5 Music genre often used for studying

