BULLETIN

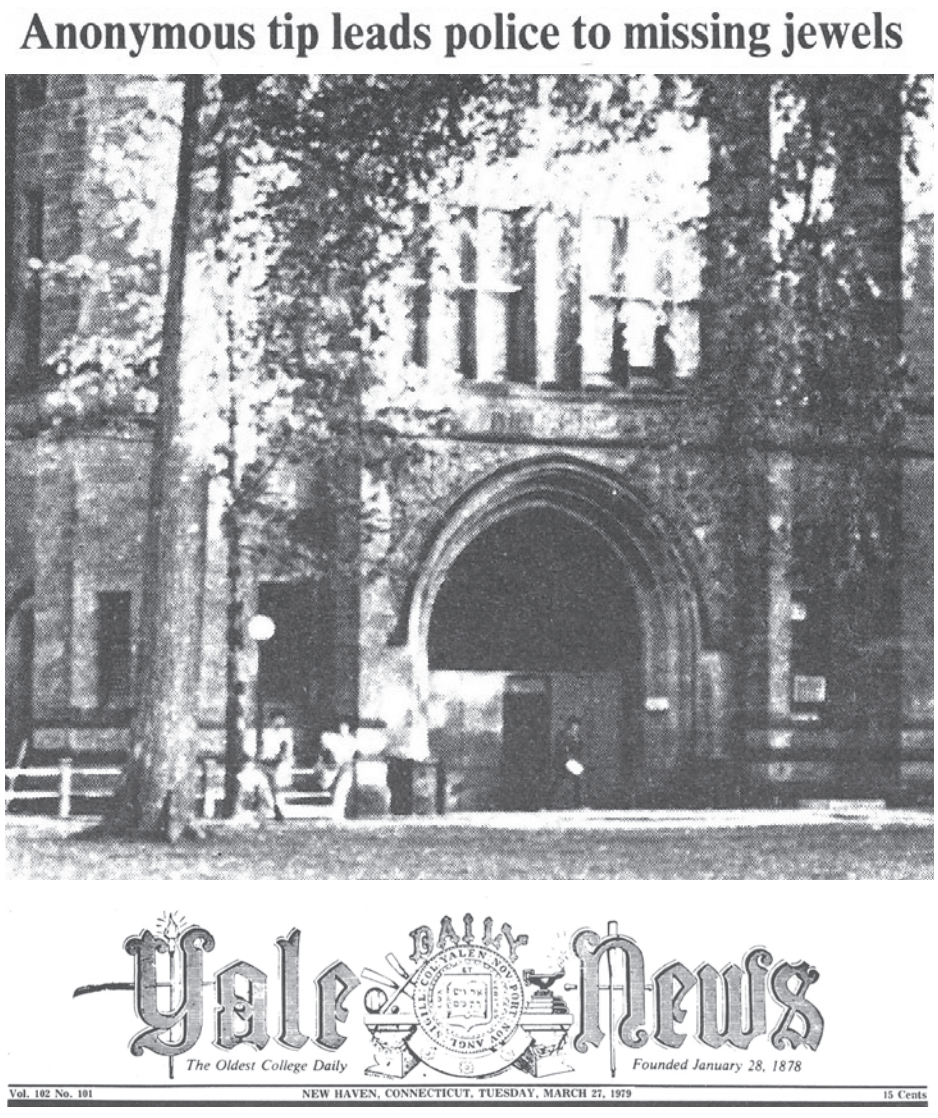

This Day in Yale History, 1979

March 27, 1979 / Anonymous tip leads police to missing jewels

By Paul Bass

The latest mystery in the bizarre case of the "Iranian Avenger" unravelled Sunday night, when an anonymous caller led Yale police to more than $2,000 worth of stolen jewelry.

Campus police informed Berkeley senior Laila Amin yesterday that they had recovered a $2,000 watch, two gold rings, and other valuables. She reported the jewels stolen on March 5 by a masked burglar claiming to represent Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, Iran's revolutionary leader.

Anonymous tip leads police to missing jewels

Yale Daily News

The Oldest College Daily — Founded January 28, 1878

Vol. 102 No. 101 — NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT, TUESDAY, MARCH 27, 1979 — 15 Cents

Behind the Headline

By Olivia Woo

I received an email last September asking me to fill out a survey to evaluate my dean, but I don't remember filling it out — in fact, I had forgotten I'd received it until I reported last week on the mid-semester departure of Berkeley's dean. Upon comparing the September email in my inbox with the one sent to Berkeley students this January, I was confused by two conflicting assertions: one email stated that reviews were "routinely" conducted in the second year of a dean's term, and the other said that the process began in their third year. In an interview with Yale College Dean Pericles Lewis, I learned that beginning this spring, review processes had not only been moved up a semester but also shortened by half. I received more detail about how student feedback is used, information which I relayed right away to students milling about in Berkeley's and JE's sunny courtyards. After gathering some of their insights into their relationships with their deans and their critiques of the feedback solicitation, I decided I'd better begin thinking of careful responses for the next feedback form I receive.

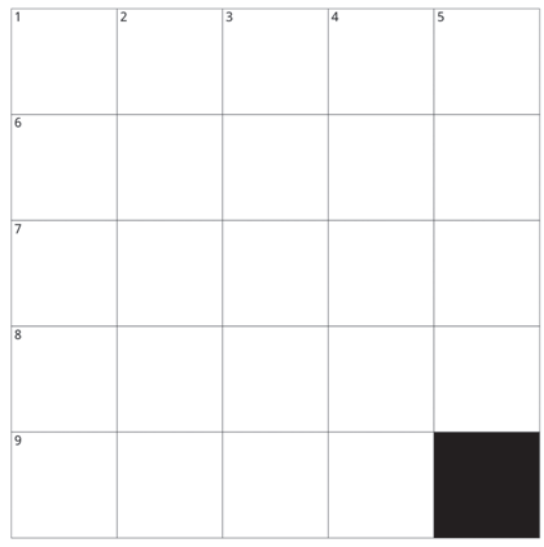

Read "Changes expedited performance reviews for Berkeley, JE, Murray deans" on page 7.

Puzzles

Puzzle by Ariana Borut '27

ACROSS
1 Photographer's request
6 Lacking courage
7 Freshwater eel, on a sushi menu
8 Great strength
9 Regular assignment in STEM classes

DOWN
1 Perplex
2 5x5 crosswords, say
3 Public relations concern
4 ___ as a feather
5 Mark up for revision

CLARIS SHIN

JANE CALLANAN

LUCAS CASTILLO-WEST

MAIA WILSON